1939 (date of the death of Freud and the beginning of the war), where an increasingly radical opposition begins to develop between Anna Freud and Melanie Klein, in front of which Sigmund Freud discreetly supported the views of his daughter. The debate

The Freud-Klein Controversies 1941-45. Following Freud's death in 1939, the radical theories of Melanie Klein were the subject of prolonged controversy and fierce debate within the British Psychoanalytical Society. At the time, individuals fought passionately in support of their positions.

The British Psycho-Analytical Society became unofficially divided into three camps: those who supported Melanie Klein, those who supported Anna Freud, and those, mainly indigenous British members, who were not aligned with either faction. By the end of 1941, many analysts, including Klein, returned to London, and tensions came to a head.
